Your Choices. As we grew up, we were presented with more and more of them on our trek towards independence, and their signficance grew with us. A large portion of our growing up occurred within the walls of CPHS. "I had become more mature and sociable since my freshman year," senior Katie McMahon said. Choices. They were the foundation of our lives from choosing where to sit at lunch freshman year to choosing where to sit at Senior Brunch four years later. We chose our path, taking new, strange turns everyday. "I chose to help out with the Student Council bake sale. That was pretty crazy," sophomore Abdullah Malik said. We chose the bad, the good, the boring, and the funny. Choices. It's these choices by which we chose to remember the year. We'll remember the daily White Sox vs. Cubs feuds between students. "I chose to be a Cubs fan because Wrigley Field wasn't made entirely of concrete," senior Philip Katz said. We'll remember where we chose to go to celebrate with our friends after another victorious football game.

Choices. There were many. Some chose to participate in clubs. "I chose to join the Speech and Debate Club because I enjoyed arguing, and I plan on becoming the President of the United States one day," junior James Freeman said. Some chose to play sports. Others chose to study. Many chose to do it all. They were kicking, defending, and rushing on the fields, hitting the books after practice, and attending morning meetings with caffeine in hand. "It was hard to wake up to go to cheerleading practice at 5:30 and to keep up with school, but we did it because we wanted to qualify for Nationals," sophomore Sarah Eriks said. Choices. Memories were made at sporting events, dances, and at weekend outings. "My friends and I always went to Steak and Shake after football games or the movies every weekend. It became a tradition of ours, and it was great because it was cheap and open 24 hours," senior Kaitlyn Shaw said. It was simple choices like this that defined the student body during the year. Choices. You made them. You controlled your year and made it your own. It truly was YOUR CHOICE. YOUR YEAR.

As the clock struck 2:27, a sigh of relief spread throughout the school. Thousands of students ruthed into the parking lot after the bell's final runs, leaving buhind the stress of quizzes, homework, and tests. The carefree days of summer had finally arrived. Many students took summer vacation as an opportunity to try something new. "During the summer, I went to New York with Mr. Degenhart and a group of theater students," junior CJ Pawlikowski said. "We tried to take the subway for the first time and everyone enjoyed watching us fail miserably." Those involved in sports often had to schedule their vacations around practices. "We had football everyday, so there was no way I could go on vacation," sophomore Mark Seip said. In addition to school sports, students also played on town teams. Senior Chelsea Gregory played softball for a local league. "My softball team, the Purple Haze, had a record of 0-13. Although it was a sad record, we had a really good time," Chelsea said. Vacations and sports weren't the only activities on students' to-do lists. Some used their free time to help build anything from cars to even houses. "I spent a lot of time working on my new house," sophomore Ryan Kabella said. Soon, the first bell of the school year brought us back to the familiar routines everyone tried to forget. In the meantime, the summer days were there to stay.

Returning to the norm brought friends and faculty back together. "The best part of being back in school was seeing all my friends that I don't normally see," senior Randy Smith said. Among friends and new teachers, the students set goals for the rest of the year and for their futures. With the already stressful six weeks assessment tests, AP classes had been an addition to many students' already hectic schedules. With the addition of so many AP classes this year, students were struggling to keep up with all the overwhelming work. This brings the worry of GPA into the picture. "Trying to maintain all A's while taking on the AP classes was my big goal that year," junior Becky Asher said. "GPA meant a lot to me, so I wanted to do my best to keep it up. The workload piles up, and college always sat in the back of your mind." At the class meetings held in the auditorium, the counselors talked with the students about getting ready for college. Many upperclassmen were already scoping out colleges that they wanted to attend. Sophomores and juniors were given the opportunity to take the PSAT's during school for free, rather than coming to school on a Saturday. Along with the freshmen, the sophomores also had to complete the ISTEP tests and complete their schedules.

"The decorated school helped with our stressful week and UbD's."

In addition to the usual dress up days, like West ern Day and Pajama Day, which allowed students to wear fuzzy slippers and cozy flannel pajamas, new days were added. Seniors added their own quirky days to the week, like Star Wars Day and Fake-an-Injury Day. "The seniors' days were absolutely hilarious," said senior Nicole Croux. "All grades participated in it. It was great to see people walking around the hallways dressed as Darth Vader and Luke Skywalker." Even though the Pep Rally was held on a Monday, instead of the usual Friday, Spirit Week's festivities helped to keep the spirit, energy and excitement going until the Homecoming game. Every girl knew that preparing for the dance could have been an all-day event, but for some preparation time was limited. "I had two hours to get ready because all the cross country runners had the DAC conference that morning, so we were all pretty tired. I even fell asleep while I

I was getting my hair done," senior Katie Riley said. Of course, the traditional after-dance events took place, but one stood out among the rest. "My favorite part of the night was when I had a food fight at House of Kobe with my friends, sister, and boyfriend," sophomore Samantha Ryan said. "My boyfriend bet me money that I would spill something on my dress; and when I hadn't, he threw a piece of chicken on me. The table across from me, which was full of my friends, had joined in; and I retaliated by putting food in my friend's mailbox after dinner." All in all, with memories ranging from food fights to cross country meets, the night was unforgettable and full of lasting memories.

By Adam Merkel

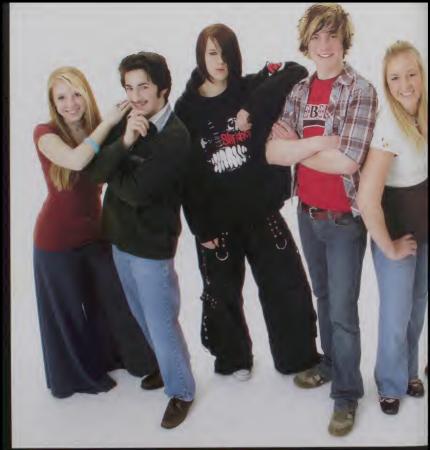

You saw them everyday as you drove down the street. They're loud, fast, and obviously expensive. Everyday, cars seem to become not only a necessity but an accessory. Modifying cars had been a common lifestyle chosen by many. Students all over the school turned their cars into flashy. mind-blowing, speed machines. Sound systems, rims, and neon lights were just a small glimpse of what students had done to their cars. "Working on cars was just a way of life. I did everything that had been done to my car by myself. It reflected my personality," junior Kenny Shaffer said. "It was an expensive hobby, and you could really get carried away with it. I started off doing just a minor change and ended up doing a lot of different things," senior Jason Abraham said. Most of the students simply used their cars as an easy way to get from point A to point B.

While some students acquired their cars as a gift, others paid for them all by themselves. "I was a waitress, and I worked hard to save money for a down payment on my Scion TC. Then, I just worked hard to make my payments every month," senior Danielle Bendy said. Although some of those cars may not have been the most envied in the parking lot, the students still took great pride in their vehicles. Even with gas prices that had sky-rocketed, many students continued to drive their cars wherever they pleased. "I wouldn't let anything stop me from driving," senior Amanda Valois said. "I hated taking the bus, and all of my friends live too far away to ask them for a ride," senior Derek Harris said. When it comes down to it, nothing else matters. Not the gas prices, not the school, not their jobs. They lived their lives "A quarter mile at a time."

strive to obtain it. Individuality is someperien during our high school years as we to find person want to be. For many students, their sed by the way they dressed. "I liked ividuali ashion and being unique," Taylor Sykes said. Others made up their own clothing style in order to stand out from the crowd. "Creativity was what I believed other people should look upon when they wanted a new style; that was where my style came from. Other people should learn to use their mind and be creative." "Art is my god, music is my religion, and creation is how I manifest that." Lauren Holevis said. Many clothing items such as ripped jeans and gauchos were popular for some while others kept their clothing the same to maintain their unique style, "Just because other people dress one way doesn't mean I have to. I'm not going to let other people's style change mine," Colin Westbrooks said. Others showed their individuality by what activities they were in or by the way they acted. "My crazy personality was what made me stand out; I did not want to act like everyone else," said Mary McCloud. So "out with the old, in with the new" did not necessarily apply when it came to being an individual.

From your seat you surveyed your oppoyou took in the atmosphere, and absorbed uys' night out. For some girls, a typical night as simply that: a night out of the house with riends. But for guys, a night out could really be a night in. And more often than not, there's form of competition involved. Numerous poker games, almost weekly, were held at the house of junior Jake Libauskas. "I liked playing poker for the competitive nature and it gave me a chance to hang out with my friends," Jake said. For junior Kenny Shaffer, his hang out fix was playing Madden Football 2006 with his friends. "Football was the greatest thing in the world and to do it on TV was just so cool," Kenny said. "I liked beating my friends and rubbing their faces if I won." No matter what he was doing, a guy had a hard time holding in his competitive nature.

Another timeless tradition of the male population was the prank. Not to be outdone by the Post-It iob done to his car by his friend senior Liza Hilliard, senior Michael Bork was able to get his revenge by transferring the yellow stickies to her car and adding his own personal touch of Saran Wrap. "Let's just say that Liza's car looked like vesterday's leftovers all wrapped up." Michael said. "Naturally, she called a truce!" Still another hot spot for guys was a little place known as "Club Vanilla." It was a party that took place a few times a year in senior Randy Smith's basement. "We did it for special events like birthdays and to celebrate the football team," said senior Nate Foulds, "Every Club Vanilla turned out to be a total blast!" As the final buzzer sounded, the cards were all on the table, and bets were placed. This was not the end. but only the beginning, of the guys' night out.

As you enter a dark room, you find yourself underneath a large tent dimly lit, surrounded by Arabic men and camels. Suddenly, the theme all makes sense. Mystic nights? Obviously, many people wondered what the theme meant, but when it came down to the actual night, not too many people cared. But what made the typical high school dance fun? For Nicole Chromey, it was two things. "My favorite part was just dancing. Our group never honestly stopped once," Nicole said. While dancing was a plus, something made it a little better. "My date was Jake Sulek and I couldn't have asked for anyone better." The usual routine of girls asking guys as dates was no different this year. With girls completely in charge, some noteworthy coincidences were bound to occur and they did. "Almost every girl in my group wore a red dress, though we didn't plan it," Emily Gyure said. One thing that some people cherished was the simple occasion of it being senior year, especially Megan Murphy. "Turnabout was amazing not only because my boyfriend was fun, but because I used my senior year to my advantage by dancing stupid and making it memorable."

bulldogs on the square

the bulldog has forever been our mascot and a staple of our controvelebrate this fierce animal, citizens known as the Stewar of the Square created a project similar to the cows of Chicago. In at, the artist who made those famous cows was commissioned to sculpt the aptly named "Bulldogs on the Square." Artists from all over Crown Point were encouraged to grab a leash and make each dog their own by creating their own theme. Many interesting designs surfaced, several even done in respect or memory of important social figures. One such dog was 'Gene,' designed in honor of World War II veteran Gene Girman; another pooch was 'Doggie Woo Woo', a symbol of the Chicago Cubs.

Each of the 58, 100-lb bulldogs was displayed in various spots around the square. Several of them were auctioned off to the public and the money donated for charities. A total of 20 were sold, including 3 blanks; however, for those out-bid, information was provided to purchase blanks of varying sizes to personalize.

ID. Becham, was donated to charity to help breast cancer patients. The money from the auction went towards enhancing CP's downtown area. Int "Doggle Woo Woo' was named after Ronnie "Woo Woo' Wickers, a Chicago Cubs fan. He visited Crown Point and met with the mayor. ing their paint brushes back and forth, Mrs. Pancini and her classes worked on ideas they provided to create three bulldogs nd the square. Two bulldogs were sponsored for the art Crown Point Community Foundation and Dr. Frederick Klepsch. The last bulldog was donated by Crown Point High School, 'High School Hairy,' 'For Good, Forever,' and 'Salvador Doggie,' Mrs. Pancini's concept, were chosen. The Advanced Art class actually painted the bulldogs with help from their instructor. "My students and I really enjoyed painting on the bulldogs," Mrs. Pancini said. "It was a great experience to work alongside them on such a creative project." It took several weeks to complete all three bulldogs, and the result of these magnificent statued dogs surpassed expectations. "Working on 'For Good, Forever' was a groovy time," Senior Amanda Valois said. "I was the only one who walked around without wearing my shoes because I did not want to get paint on them; however, I accidently spilled paint on my sweater and belt."

Sitting in Art class, Danielle LaDuke (12) works on Salvador control of the three buildogs painted by students. "It was exhilirating to merge together all our ideas on a blank canvas," Danielle said. et With her chin held high, Leah Burke (12) is honored to participate in painting High School Halir, "It was proud to help complete a unique art project and contibute to the community in a way no other class could have," Leah said.

The last bell rang at 2:26 and a collective sigh of relief could be heard throughout the entire student body. The exams were completed, and it was time to take a breather as everyone celebrated with their friends and rushed to the parking lots to begin their breaks. Winter and spring breaks provided both students and faculty with a chance to relax, recharge and have fun. The students found many different ways to spend their free days. hroughout the school year, most students spent their days filling out boring worksheets or doing as much homework as possible during their study halls. However, every now and then some kind of interesting assignment would pop up during the everyday routine and make learning just a little bit more fun.

Mrs. Ciochina's senior AP Literature class was given two opportunities to leave a positive impact on their community by being assigned a "Personal Impact Project." "I was working on starting a recycling program for bottles and cans throughout the school," senior Carissa Buchholz said. The AP Literature class was also given the chance to interview local people that were involved in important events in the past such as World War II or Vietnam. The enormous group of seniors gathered in front of the school at nearly three o'clock in the morning to sign up for which chapter of the project they wanted to do. When all of the projects were finally completed, they were compiled into a book. "Overall, the Legacy Project was a valuable experience. Granted, I have never been closer to a complete nervous breakdown, but in the end, it all came together," senior Ryan Brock said.

Getting to school in the morning was usually a bigger problem with the upper classmen due to the freedom of driving. Working late nights also added more sleep to the agenda."I would rather sleep in because of work and homework," junior Matt Kubascik said. Getting to school early for help may have sounded crazy, but it might have been extremely helpful."If I needed more help, zero period was there," junior Anna Stephens said."It helped me because it was more one-on-one time with the teacher." Making up guizzes or attending meetings for clubs were also more uses for zero period. It was a versatile period, but it did have its flaws. Being only 20 minutes, some students found it hard to get some things done. "I did not like zero period because I didn't think 25 minutes helped any-thing, "junior Amanda Barnes said. Zero period was helpful for the average student, either by allowing more sleep or homework help.

Others based their course selections on classes that would help them after high school." I took Visual Basics because I wanted to earn a degree in computer science," freshman Jonathan Mitchell said. areer fulfillment, lasting relationships, and iob security: what did these have in common? To achieve one's goals, a person may have tried Vocational Training courses. Vocational training programs helped students prepare for college and work. The objective was for both college and work readiness for all students. "I felt as if those experiences would have helped me in the future," junior Jeff Fishero said. The labor market became more specialized, demanding more of vocational education and subsidized apprenticeship for businesses. Vocational Training classes offered Machine Shop to Child Development courses. "I chose to take Machine Shop because it built character," junior Kyle Kocher said. In many high schools, secretarial and clerical programs opened the door to communications and graphic distribution. Strong preparation for success in technical and professional fields required mastering other knowledge and skills. "I was planning on going into the Marines and WyoTech after that because it had the best industrial and mechanical training, "sophomore Jesse Ashcraft said. AP classes had been added because a new policy moved students who had achieved an A in a regular level course to honors. At first, students were against being forced into classes. "If I would have known I gotten a 'B'." senior Carissa Bucholz said. After participating and forced in honor classes, however, some students changed their minds. "Although I wasn't happy about the policy, I was glad because of what I learned because of it," Carissa said. Also, senior Phil Katz thought "it was important to take honors classes because the first thing most colleges more importantly was how well you did in them." Since AP classes added more difficult work, students in these honors classes received weighted grades. "It was good because you got better grades for working hard," freshman Erin Santay said. Some students thought they should have decided their own schedules and pushed themselves to do better. Electing to take Physics, sophomore Caroline Brown thought "AP classes should not have been forced onto students." In the end, students needed the challenge, so for their future

For KATIE KEILMAN, student government was much more than a bunch of kids making decisions. Starting from fourth grade, Katie continued as an officer until graduation. "I tried it out and ended up loving what it was all about, so I continued to be involved throughout middle school and high school," Katie said. She attended several student council conventions, including the Hugh O'Brien Youth Leadership convention, where she was the single representative from Crown Point. "It was a big convention with speakers, workshops, and the meeting of life long friends." Katie also helped to organize many activities, including the blood drive and new student pizza party. kevin doolin

Flourishing with Irish descent, KEVIN DOOLIN was not your typical senior. His passion was Irish dancing. "My parents took me to classes when I was young and I hated it. Then they took me to a professional performance and I loved it. That's when it all started." Since he was seven. Kevin had been practicing at least once a week for over two hours. He had performed at St. Anthony Medical Center, weddings and Mrs. Dewes' English class, where the classroom focus was on foreign weddings. "It was fun to do. It also introduced me to many new things, including new friends and environments," Kevin said. "I could continue to do it and become a professional. Pro equals money!"

Punk. A stereotypical image of this word would be a metal-head who listened to music so loud that a person would be afraid to even say hello. But there was always one that broke a boundary, and in this case, punk nice-guy AARON RIDDLE smashed through. Riddle defined himself through his music and artwork, which had been in many shows. "I just let my subconscious mind flow onto my paper. I often got headaches by the time I was done," Aaron said. With his clothing and musical-artistical style, one might have thought that he was just your average punk boy. But, in essence, he was just expressing himself like anybody else would; he wanted to give inspiration to all, "If you have the power to perfect any skill you do, you will succeed because it shows you have the heart. Look inside your heart for inspiration above all else."

I wish I knew how important my family was when I was younger. I realized how much my mother did for my sister and myself. She raised us on her own and always wanted what was best for us. My mother was the most pure person I knew.

Patrick Coffey

If I would have known freshman year what I know now, I would have tried to study harder for all of my classes. Also, I think I would have gotten more out of the high school experience if I would have participated in more sports on top of orchestra.

Jun Velyamos

I regret not breaking out of my shell until the middle of high school. I wish that I would have known how to open up and not be so shy when I was younger. Once I stopped being shy I gained a lot of great friends that I may not have otherwise.

Katu Fabrice

"If I knew then what I know now..."

One thing that I wish I would have known when I was younger was that time in high school went by very quickly. I tried to enjoy high school as much as possible before it was gone, and it was time for me to move into the real world.

ashley Stershina

I wish that I would have told people that I was Polish. It would have been cool. Back in the day I was too worried about being called "Polish sausage" or of someone making Polish jokes. But now I am proud of being Polish. It's my claim to fame.

Natalie Grahmski

I wish I would have known that tech vests were not cool in 6th grade, or ever. I must have had three awful vests that I wore all the time. They looked especially cool paired with matching wind pants. Hard as I tried, I just couldn't keep the trend alive.

Chebea Stregor

Try and make as many friends as possible. The more friends you have, the more people you have to remember you by. Also, it is important for you to choose your friends wisely because their influence reflects what others think of you,

An avid soccer fan, STEPHANIE KUTANOVSKI had the means to take her devotion to a whole other level. Her uncle owns the Chicago Storm Indoor Soccer Team. As the self-declared "# 1 fan," Stephanie doesn' tet gas prices keep her from cheering on her favorite team. "I've traveled to St. Louis, Cleveland, and Milwaukee to watch the team. Plus, I'm constantly driving to Chicago to see them," Stephanie said. "The only game I missed was their tournament in California." Stephanie doesn't just support the players during games but also outside of tournaments. "One of my cousins was on the team. Plus, I was really good friends with all of the other players. We always hung out after their games."

From a glance JOSH BREITWEISER may have looked like your average guy who just loved his video games, but his involvement in his extracurricular activities made him outstanding. He was constantly diving into something new and satisfiing his performance side. "I was in the fall play and the spring musical as Fyedka," Josh said. "I also decided to be in Showtime, the school broadcasting segment, and I could play the recorder with my nose." As a big jokester, he was one one of the most popular correspondents on Showtime, but Josh had a serious side, too. He revealed it when he devoted time to helping out with the Hurricane Katrina relief project with Mrs. Ciochina's English class and when he started planning his future. "I'm planning on going to Indiana University to study economic consulting and international business."

During the hot summer days when some were splashing into Hub Pool's chlorinated water, JAMES FREE-MAN, decided to cannonball into a pool of opportunities. After being trained through a vigourous six-hour program, he engaged in activities such as bowling, horseback riding, swimming, and a Bible study with abused and neglected children from ages 6 to 12. "The experience at Indiana's Epworth Forest was like no other," James said. "By providing them a moment of emotional sunshine, it made it all worth while." He "learned to be more patient," more appreciative, and more understanding; and though the fun and games had subsided. James Freeman left a changed man.

Bouncing off the walls like a ball full of energy and activities, CAITLIN JOHNSTON "believed that the best way to live life was to experience it in every way possible. The best way to do this was to throw myself into the world and take part in the myriad of activities available." Caitlin was in newspaper, soccer, Speech and Debate, SADD, Charity Finders, Chess Club, Quiz Bowl, Super Bowl, Quill and Scroll, and was a state editor of Latin Club. In her spare time she was involved in Community Theater, volunteered, worked at Baja's, attended state for Academic Decathalon, and learned French on her own, while she maintained good grades. She enjoyed every minute of her hectic schedule. "I have so many passions which was why I was involved in various activities," Caitlin added.

Running down the court and focusing only on the basket, ROB THURMAN shot the basketball and scored against the Lowell Red Devils. Rob then erupted into a victory dance on the way down to the opposing side's end of the court. Special Olympics basketball, Special Olympics Bowling, and Special Olympics track and field were just some of the activities Rob participated in. Outside of school, he "enjoyed toys and playing on the computer. "One of his favorite things to do was to go to the movies." I loved going to see movies. My favorites were the Lord of the Rings trilogy, the Harry Potter movies, Star Wars movies, and The Matrix triloay," Rob said.

There was more to Valentine's Day than just chocolate, flowers, and Crush cans. MICHELLE LAMERE agreed when instead of going out, she sacrificed her day to help out. "I volunteered at Gingerbread Preschool on Valentine's Day," Michelle said. "During Valentine's Day, I read a story to the kids and then passed out candy to the children." Her volunteering was not just for the one day. "I had volunteered there for about five years," she said. "One of the main reasons I had volunteered there for so long was because my mother was the head teacher at Gingerbread Preschool." Another main reason was because of the children. "My favorite part about volunteering was getting to interact with the children," Michelle said.

The train slowly chugged into the station as the clock struck 7:30, leaving BRIAN DERUNT and the steam to linger behind. His short disappointment was soon met by the news of another train to Chicago boarding in one hour. Around 8:30 he boarded like normal; however, it wasn't until the train came to an abrupt stop around 9:45 when everyone became worried and confused. "There has been a derailment and we will be stopped here until further notice," a shaky voice said. Anxiety flooded Brian's emotions. "That could've been me," he said, "I was lucky not to be on that train, lucky it wasn't me, but I was still sad for those who lost their relatives." Coincidentally, Brian's tardiness detoured him from what could have been the longest train ride he'd ever take.

"I love God and working with my church doing missions and helping people," RACHEL SMITH said. Last summer she went to Mexico to spread the word of God. "I loved the experience of getting to go to another country." She didn't just decide to go; she had to work to raise money and go through four days of "drama Evangelism" and mission training to get there. In Veracruz where she spent the duration of the two weeks, "[she] performed three dramas and a dance, and then prayed for people." Towards the end of the trip, "we saw one little boy who had club feet and was wearing braces," she said. "He had never been able to walk without them. He never jumped in his life and he'd never been able to play soccer with his friends, but we prayed for his legs and suddenly he started running around. It was so awesome."

As she got ready for a dance performance, Hall Pulls applied her make-up carefully. "To dance was one thing, but you had to look good doing it. I had danced since I was in 7th grade and I loved it ever since," Hayley said. Being a dancer came with many responsibilities such as making it to all the practices, not forgetting any jewelry or having fun. Practically living at the national award-winning dance up to for Hayley. Classes were Monday through Friday from 3-9 with occasional weekend practices. As she "juggled [her] boyfriend, school, and dance for CPDA, [she] never had time for friends," Hayley said.

"Once you found the right volunteer work, it was fun," JESSICA SPURLOCK said as a volunteer of the Halls of Horror. Having accomplished 18 of her 40 credited hours, she worked for a total of 6 days with people like Chris Gagne. Community service gave students the opportunity to meet new people, discover new ideas, exercise their talents, learn from others, and find a career they enjoyed. Incoming freshmen had to contribute 40 hours of community service in order to complete their qualifications toward a diploma. Freshmen were able to achieve community service in a variety of ways. Some students volunteered their time at the library, while others contributed time in soup kitchens and helped with the elderly or the young.

Being the only male junior varsity cheerleader, ETHAN BREITWEISER had a long journey ahead of him. He did what he loved and didn't care what people thought of him. "When people made fun of me for being a cheerleader, I shrugged it off. What people thought of me was their problem, I didn't let things get me down." Most male cheerleaders, like Ethan, did not get the recognition they deserved for their hard work. "Cheerleading was fun; it kept me busy and in shape," Ethan said. Between cheerleading, homework, school and community service hours, Ethan had to work hard to achieve all of his goals. These goals included getting through high school, getting a job, going to college, being successful, and making new friends. He showed he was proud and not timid to be a cheerleader when he wore the bright school colors of red and white.

iulie & brian elston

Many teachers try to keep their family life and school life separate, but for JULE and BRIAN ELSTON that was not possible. Working together made their family and work life one. Mrs. Elston taught and instructed English and Newspaper since 1992, but took a short break in order to stay at home and raise her daughters. After eight years, Mrs. Elston came back to teaching, but unfortunately, she and her husband were in different school districts. Recently, Mr. Elston began teaching at Crown Point after transferring from Lake Central. He was the assistant coach for the varsity basketball team and a biology teacher for the sophomore class. "It's nice having the same breaks with our girls," she said. With their busy teaching and extracurricular schedules, they now had more time together.

Teaching for 29 years, KAREN Cox always loved being a teacher. She decided to become an art teacher at an early age because her "dad was an artist and there were always art supplies around the house." Being with the students was her favorite part of teaching, especially with her son Billy." lenjoyed being at the same school as my son." As she improved students' creativity with art, she learned how "to appreciate the simple beauty that was around." Although she admitted to having had a few regrets pursuing her doctorate degree, she remained content with life. "If I was younger, I would've continued my education because there are a lot of opportunities available at the college level."

She also learned more about herself and the way students' minds worked by being a teacher. "Teaching has taught me to appreciate the tricks and tribulations of students."

Starting everyday off with a smile and a bit of "dry humor," JOHN BARE was proud to be an industrial tech teacher of thirty-three years. The opportunity to teach first presented itself "when the old high school was remodeled in 1974" and since then "it has been his main focus." He wanted "each student to achieve all they could," including his daughter. For him, "watching her enjoy and understand the subject" was the most enjoyable. Although "interacting with the students and watching them grow" proved to be important to him, nothing compared to the opportunity to "have taught [his] daughter in class for two years." Everyday of "interaction showed [he] cared about them not just as students, but as people" and in the case of his daughter, as family.

Industrial Tech teacher JUSTIN STURM appeared to the average student to be just that, a teacher. This misconception couldn't be farther from the truth. Justin's active lifestyle included riding his dirt bike, making custom speaker enclosures out of fiber glass, which "felt a lot like sculpting," and in the summer, he refinished and recovered a 1968 Mercury Cougar. Not only was he completely involved in what he thought was life's greatest enjoyments, but he also engulfed himself in helping his "buddy finish his basement" in the hopes of creating a man's "game room." The company of his "buddies" could be enjoyed over a bite to eat or a simple game of cards. When the night dwindled down, he escaped into his garage-like-haven where he had attempted to 'complete some of the projects he was working on."

DEFINING STORY BY KATIE WEFLER A WINNING season

Unbelievah 1 This, truly, was the only word to describe varsity football's undefeated season. A DAC championship rown and the prestigious fame and coverage only added to the players' enthusiasm for the ame. In fact, a would seem that Crown Point High School varsity notball player realized how fortunate they were to still be playing.

"After I hus my knee, I realized how lucky I was before to we two goo. legs and to be able to run and do stuff some others weren't lucky enough to do," quarterback senior Matt Jansen said.

Endless summer, fall practices and a longer football season were easy to overcome when everyone was striving for the same goal: state was in everyone's mind. When Jansen and Ernest were both out, local newspapers were wondering whether our season would be good or not. In reality, it was excellent. The season taught the players some realities. "I had realized that some things are not as hard as you make them out to be," senior Nick Conway said.

Friday night lights and practices showed team and fan spirit, especially after a win, when the squad would sing the school song. Inspiration played a key role in this year's football season. The players in turn were also motivated by their teammates, and it completely showed on the field, especially every Friday night at home games. "What I will miss most about this football season was looking up at the crowd," senior Jordan Rhye said.

"I just tried to look at my teammates and see that they were my friends and that made me want to do everything in my ability to help us, as a team, to win," Nick said. Although some may think it was a bittersweet ending in losing the sectional championship to Merrillville, making the season's record 11-1, most wouldn't have changed it for the world. "No, I wouldn't have changed this season for anything," senior Vince Lewis said. "We're still the champs and always will be." It really was their year.

A sold-out Homecoming game, painted faces and screams of joy. Friday nights had a deeper meaning and a more emotional feeling. As fans flocked to the stands and cheered on the successful varsity team, the inspiration to do better than before soon became a team goal. This season, the team traveled all the way to sectionals and with them a barrage of loyal fans.

Consisting of more ups than downs, the Bulldogs amazing 11-1 record drove the Superfans to even greater heights. Tailgating, which happened before every game, became a ritual. Costumes became more than a Halloween pastime, and being a Bulldog fan became more than just a Friday night routine. This was truly a great season to be a Bulldog.

"It was great to play at a competibandle," sophomore Russell Chick said. Yet for some, they believed that the have the spotlight. "Most of the varsity team consisted of our seniors," ju-Mohr said. "It was their last year and they were the best, so they deserved to play."

At the end of the season last year, the coaches decided to hold workouts year long, and this year the results could be seen. The long, intensive practices tested the young players, pushing them to the absolute best of their abilities. "It was tough getting up at six in the morning to go to conditioning over the summer," junior Eric Manley said. "We usually stayed the night at our friends' houses, got up, and went together. There were about seven of us."

The Crown Point football teams did not seem to have much trouble working together this season, which in turn led to the numerous

At times it was tough, yet many of the girls enjoyed being on the team. "You got to meet new people and experience the pressures of matches and tournaments," freshman Chelsea Gyure said. They were challenged by the weather conditions of extreme heat and rain. The girls had taken pride in their efforts to achieve their best and work as a team. They came in second place at sectionals and went on to regionals where they placed 5th.

Also, there were memorable moments on the course. "During one of the competitions, I was walking to my ball sideways on a steep hill, carrying my clubs, and I slipped on an acorn and fell," freshman Nicole Amodeo said. "After that, I was really embarrassed."

It took the team hard work and dedication to compete as one of the best. It was at Curtis Creek golf course that junior Terra Miller shot an even par 72 and and was honored as a sectional medalist. She made it to the state competition for her third consecutive year. She accomplished only two strokes over par at the regional com-

Along contrains payment, they earned a nice bonus of winning the DAC title, which is the first DAC title in Coach Malaski's career. "The most memorable part of the season was being the DAC champions because it has been so long since we've won the DAC," sophomore Ashley Collins said. It was the first time in ten years for the team.

Practicing was not the only element that helped the team succeed. The girls bonded and helped each other on and off the field. "As a team we were like sisters and would do anything for each other," senior Caitlin Rivich said. According to the girls, Coach Malaski was a huge inspiration. "Mr. Malaski was the one who inspired me the most because he wanted us to win just as much as we wanted to win," said Caitlin. At sectionals, the tournament started out well for the girls. They beat Renesselaer in the first game 9-0, and they beat Munster in overtime 4-2. Unfortunately, in the championship match the girls lost the sectional title in overtime to Lake Central, losing 1-2.

As a ves started to build, the muscles in their legs loosened and the girls' cross country team waited for the gun and the beginning of its 4-kilometer race. "From the beginning, I knew this was my last two. That was the hardest thing: accepting every meet, knowing it is it is it is a factor. That mentality pushed me to do my very best," senior Amanda Allen said. Wang their very best was the most important aspect of their season. At the Cod or translational, every varsity runner achieved a personal record.

That was such a rare achievement and was definitely the highlight of the season," sophomore Jenn Bane said. But these amazing results didn't come easy.
"We ran between three and seven miles everyday, with both long runs and speed workouts," Jenn said. Between camp, summer practices, and in season training over three months the girls chalked up over 400 miles of pure running.

The girls traveled for a week during the summer down to Indianapolis for their summer camp. While in Indianapolis, the team ran between 8-12 miles a day not only within city parks, but also along the Canal and in surrounding suburbs. "Camp was an intense bonding period for the team because we really got to know our new freshmen. The only bad part was we had to stay in two separate rooms," senior Katie Riley said. "The best part was when Jenn Bane snuck up on me in the dark when I was trying to sleep."

The girls qualified as a team to run as a team in the regional meet. With the regional meet being at the girls' home course at Lemon Lake, they were more at ease and more comfortable. The team earned its second consecutive semi-state team qualification at New Prairie High School for the final meet of the season, finishing the season with a 7-5 record overall. "The first few weeks of practice were difficult, but it was all worth it," freshman Rachel Kolavo said.

RUNNING STORY BY TYLER THOMPSON THEIR way to state

As a das of sweat poured down the runners' pounding chests, each one of them moved on, leaving the ectators in a state of shock. With the rigorous practices in the afternoons of Monday through Fir ay in othe even more demanding morning practices Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, it was no

Sensor. Just that was it that helped each individual discipline himself in order to compliate each day's assigned amount of miles? "Everyone on the team helped push and motivate one another to achieve success," freshman Zach Vetter said. With the occasional exhausting climb up and then down the bleachers. "running the minimal five miles a day seemed tolerant."

All of the hard work and dedication the team showed throughout the year did not go unrewarded. "Every Thursday night we would take turns having spaghetti dinners at someone's house and then we would play football afterwards," senior Stephen Hein said. The team was especially excited when all their hard work was shown off by finishing in second place for DAC, becoming the champions for the Sectionals, and finishing in second place for the Regional. Just one week after the regional, our teams came in fifth place for Semi-State, qualifying for state.

Just as frosting goes on cake, a special ingredient was needed before every meet in order to rile up the team. According to senior Jeff Polacek, "Hein's pep talks" seemed to do just the trick. This team ritual was no fluke, when the team completed the season in eighth place at state. Although the hardwork had paid off, ending a season can be bittersweet.

orting to eason off with a good record was no surprise for the varsity wrestling team, but what was surpeng was how young the team was. With only four seniors to lead the team, this may have been the youngest team thaulte a while. Seniors took charge and led the way through the season. They gave their opponents a run for their Underclassmen also put forth effort to back up the seniors. Against the No liville Pirates, "the team was making a comeback, and the noventum vy in our favor," Randy Smith (12) said. Although, in the end the Pirates were the victor, the meet was extremely intense. Even with only four seniors, it was apparent the talent and endurance was senior equivalent.

Although there was room for improvement, accomplishments were not lacking on this youthful team. Leadership turned already talented freshmen into Varsity athletes and was the key to the great season. One of the biggest wins was for two major reasons. Portage finally fell in the regional championship meet. We had not beaten Portage in over a decade. The other reason was obvious. They won the Regional championship and advanced to semi-state.

With the team doing so well, the wrestlers were also focused on their individual responsibilities. "The Carnahan was the most memorable match for me because it was the first time I won it in my weight class," Ryan Gill (11) said. Along with fellow teammates, the wrestlers also bonded with Coach Vlink and the rest of the coaches. "The day before winter break, we had sprints. When we went up to the wrestling room to continue practice, Coach Vlink had laid out doughnuts and Gatorade for everyone." Teammate memories were not lacking either. "I enjoyed Kocher joke Thursday's," Anthony Conway (10) said. With lessons learned and mistakes fixed, the team pulled together for an incredible season.

Through the tough trials they faced all season, they still were able to laugh. Heading the girls' swim team to be victimes than losses, one of the three captains, senior Ashlie Barclay, motivated them. In return, she was notivated to disperse the form others. "My parents definitely had inspired me and encouraged me to begin

As a first year participant on the swim team, freshman Gabi Lobaski was inspired to join the team by a fellow teammate, sophmore Rachel Smith. "She encouraged everybody and made me feel like part of the team," Gabi said.

They arrived at practice early in the morning before the sun rose and left after the sun had set. Morning and after school practices consisted of 'lifting weights and abdominal exercises in addition to swimming," senior Kimberly Bowser said. Swimmers and divers showed much dedication to what they loved throughout the whole season. They received not only inspiration from teammates and coaches, but also their parents. Some, on the other hand, didn't have a chance for their parents to come and see them. "My first meet in America, I was so nervous, but I swam," junior Hiroko Watanabe said.

During meets, the swimmers and divers would cheer for their teammates on the sidelines or finish with other things. "I would do homework or cheer for people," freshman Rachel Kolavo said. "When I wasn't swimming, I would cheer for my teammates," freshman Vicki Naumoski said. Some swimmers felt that one of their best meets was when they swam against Merrillville.

at the Highland Invitational was not the only thing that caught fire this winter. The boys nd diving teams performed like a wildfire, scoring in the top places. To start the fire, the boys practiced stre usly and conditioned early in the morning before school and right after school. "Morning practice 15 to 6:50. And we practiced again after school from 3:00 until 5:30." so more Kyle Snow said. "It was really hard getting up that early in the then getting into the cold pool." During any given practice, the boys swam anywhere between 6,000 and 8,000 yards or between 8,000 to 9,000 yards six days a week. They could tell they really had something special when things really started to heat up and senior Chris Morin broke the team record for the 200 yard individual medley during the meet against Hobart. He also threatened another school record coming within a hundredth of a second to breaking the 100 yard butterfly. To turn up the heat before meets, each athlete had his own way of getting fired up for their event. Some silently focused while others got pumped up listening to music and getting the adrenaline going, "Before the diving events, I listened to Led Zeppelin to prepare myself, and be ready to dive," sophomore Jimmy Page said.

At the Portage Invite, the divers took first place among the other diving teams in the DAC. Page placed first over all while Les Andrews placed second. "The Portage Invite was my favorite meet because it was my first Invite, and it was exciting to place first against all the other teams in the DAC conference," said junior Tony Gambini, "It was also really exciting because we were a young team. The team placed third at the Conference while also placing third in the sectional meet.

At the state meet, Chris Morin placed fourth in the 50 yard freestyle, anchored in the 200 freestyle relay that placed seventh, and brought home a state championship

Also, growing up playing together, it only seemed fair that their inspiration came from each other. "My team was my inspiration," Ashley said. "We got along so well compared to past years, and we were finally reunited again.] euess-you could say.

Yet, there was always inspiration and togetherness. What did they do to prepare and train for the upcoming games?

Well, there were team warm-up rituals, for sure. "Before the games we played a quick game of the seniors versus the underclassmen," Ashley said. "We always won of course, and then we had a little dance party in the locker room. It was a lot of fun!"

Inspired from last year's loss at sectionals, this year the girls trained year-round: the answer and compensation for their season. "We conditioned during the summer, and people who were not in a fall sport conditioned together during the fall season," junior Aniellica Rossond said.

Breaking even with an 11-11 record had to be the answer to this year's girls' season, along with their past phenomenal seasons: they took the game seriously, but left aside time to realize that they could also have fun. Of course, the competition was tough and winning was important, but what mattered most was where they were and who they were with in the end; on a basketball court where they shared their memories with their closest friends, reliving their past seasons. "Love of the game" was the truest quote to describe the 2005-2006 varsity girls' basketball team.

"Everyone on the team made this a great opportunity." So whether it was showing off their skills on the court, practicing for the next game, or getting pumped up for a game, these girls knew how to play their beloved game, basketball, and they knew how to do it together.

While the freshman team started their season with a lack of familiarity with their new coaching staff and spossibly even teammates, the JV basketball team had benefited from having the same coach for two years in a row. They endured similar practices and game plans as they had learned their freshman year. "Sarge was just a great all over coach; he cared about you both on and off the court," sophomore Jimmy Donley said. Junior varsity players who endured a rocky start to their season managed to finish off the year with a record of 10-10. "We had a very limited amount of people on the team," Jimmy said.

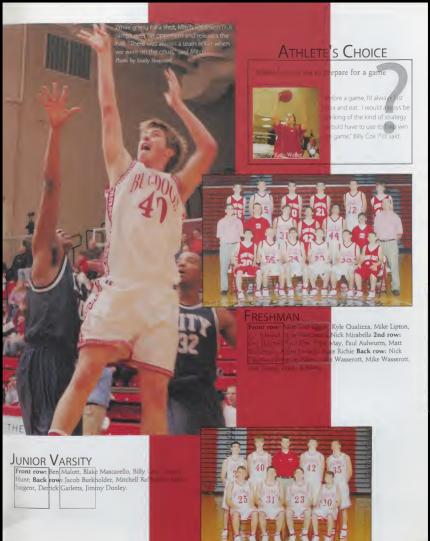

The junior varsity played the majority of their season with only six to seven players. Many of the other teammates were unable to play, due to injuries; other players were moved up to play for the varsity team.

All in all, it was a very hard year, but the junior varsity managed to pull together and finish off the season with a all together moderate record. It was made possible by a chemistry found between the coach and his players, friendships held between the players both on and off the court, and a large amount of effort put forth by everyone on the team.

impossible. Only about five points shy of placing first, the team took third place in sectionals. Many girls including ,Melissa Rodich and Martina Buchholz, made it to regionals through inspiration and teamwork. With their muscles aching and sweat blazing, the girls performed their ultimate best, and most made their personal best records. "I moved to regionals at West Side because of my personal record in the mile and the 4 x 800," freshman Maggie Schwuchow said. While each girl was inspired by their coach, almost every girl chose their own teammates for personal assistance and motivation. "My coach was my biggest inspiration. She was always encouraging," sophomore Jenn Bane said. Jenn and other teammates made sectional champs in the 4 x 400 race. Even when inspired, the track team stuck by each other with cooperation and teamwork. With changing words on sidewalks, and making up funny tunes, the girls contributed to a tremendous amount of fascinating stories. "To sum it up, we had a new inside joke every day! Once we tossed a tennis ball around, and later we named it Richard," freshman Rachel Kolavo said. Even with celebration and anguish, the girls' track team became a complete whole. With their hard work and dedication, each person will remember this season. The team was able to accomplish all and still have comical memories in the course.

Although some upperclassman had returned and become new leaders, the young members knew they would, once again, have to make big strides for the team. "We were a younger team, and even though we were still pretty young, all of our returning guys were more experienced," said sophomore Sean Polacek. Training for their track and field events involved strength and stamina to make it through every race, throw, or jump. "There weren't really any 'easy' days in track. I mean, this is what other sports did to punish their kids. We found some type of joy in it," said senior Patrick Coffey. To get excited from Sectionals "all the guys in the field events and sprinters got mohawks. We did this more as a team unity thing than anything. They seemed to be good luck because everyone who shaved their heads qualified for Regionals," said Patrick. After all of the hard work and dedication they put in, more every match there was a ritual of each girl taking turns to bring in snacks for the rest of the team. The majority of the girls said that they would not be able to function without their food. Other ways they limbered up before the match were doing cheers and making pyramids. Furthermore, if it was an away match, they would loosen up on the bus ride. "Riding the bus to and from matches was my favorite memory from this season," sophomore Marija Radiceska said. Also, the rides were a means for the girls to cool off on the way home. "On the ride back from the Valpo match, the other varsity girls and I made up ridiculous songs like "Old McBaron had a Farm" and assigned animals to everyone." Senior Natalie Grabowski said. Most girls' favorite team to play against was their first match of the season versus their rival, Munster, because they saw really good players and learned their tennis tactics and strategies. "Even though we lost 0-5, every single person stepped up and we played our best tennis," Junior Beth Iddings said. "We certainly did better than expected... we'll be back next year!" Several of the girls planned on continuing their tennis skills and strategies learned from Coach Baron for years to come. Many seniors will take their experiences and accomplishments with them when playing on their college tennis teams.

ee especially with an injury to senior Tommy Wise, which ted in him being able to play in some aspects of the game. We had a ber of injury that we had to fight through, but losing Tommy hurt us,"

With a day like most other athletes playing a high school sport, the boys on the varsity team began their schedule with school and either ending it with a practice or game. In the words of most of the players, they never lost focus; especially for the seniors. We were excited about graduating," senior Adam Kennedy said. "I'm sure that we will be a little sad when it's over, but we are not focused on that right now. With the dugout full of players and the stands filled with fans, it would be impossible for the athletes to forget the feeling of playing in front of many spectators and photographers. Yet, most importantly was the feeling of winning over a tough opponent. Recalling a fond memory, Adam Kennedy said, "LaPorte was my favorite game this season. We won 16-5 against one of the top programs in the state, and we hit the ball well."

With practice also came perfection, and the boys strived for their chance to uphold their high goals and aspirations for the season. "Two machines with two different pitches gave us a chance to improve our hitting," junior Chris Saroff said. This surely came in luck when playing against their toughest fundamental opponents, which included Merriliville, LaPorte and Lake Central.

"Hitting the ball well" never wavered with the team, and their season scores proved this; all of their hard work, dedication and focus were put into both school and baseball, making them a prominent group.

Putting playing and practicing aside, these team members had a true love of the game by working well together under tough circumstances and remaining loyal to their team members. "The guys on this team were great to work with," senior Nick Ullmann said. "I enjoyed competing with them."

"After we won ten games in a row Coach McCaleb had so sing a Spice Girls song," said sophomore Russell Chick said. It was unanimous that Coach McCaleb singing was the funniest part of the entire season. Since most of the players have been playing since they were in t-ball, around ten to twelve years, finally playing at a high school level was almost the fulfillment of their dreams. "I have been playing baseball since I was in t-ball, my dad inspired me to play," said sophomore Russell Chick

With a Varsity team that had done so well the Junior Varsity and the freshman team had a lot to live up to, and with a winning record they did just that. They had to work extra hard and be productive during practice, so that next year they could be on the Varsity team. At practices we had batting practice, we took infield and outfield practices, and ran to the four polls, said sophomore loe Maginot.

This past year cheerleading incidents had risen, and people started to speculate whether reforms should be made to the sport. It appeared that everyone had an opinion on what they should have done to prevent such an accident. In reality, the cheerleading team had already been doing its part. Six to eight hours of practicing a week and making sure every possible maneuver was perfect was not only practice, but a way to make sure nothing went wrong. These girls knew the risks. mounts was and for a moment, the crowd holds its breathe; only a few are trained for this type of situation. It he player lay helplessly on the ground, the managers and trainers rushed to the scene with relief ready in the situads. A pack of ice, dry cloth to wrap the twisted bones and skin, or perhaps a simple Band-Aid and Neospe in came to the rescue for all types of sprained ankles, skinned knees, and other injures. Each deciphering sport or d for "different jobs and skills," junior Justin Luebcke said.

trainers like freshman Caroline Anderson, donating "about twenty-five hours per week," and managers like Justin, donating "thirty plus hours a week," it was easy to see why the underappreciated job was one designated specifically for the few, the projud the ones able to handle the commitment

Even when some found it difficult to continue, the trainers and managers discovered new ways to push themselves. "I could work on my schoolwork, and it was great because I could ask the older kids to help me," Caroline said.

Their loyalty was not only to the players and the game, but to each other. According to Caroline, the "system of you help me and I will help you," proved to be the glue that held the sport together and the factor that made training easy Without the assistance of the trainers and managers, the water bottles would be empty and the players dehydrated, the towels and uniforms dirty and unfolded, and the players would be exhausted from carrying their equipment.

With every head-on-collision, with every scraped knee, with every sprained wrist there was a trainer or manager on the scene to save the day. Without them, the game would be hectic, timely, and a whole lot more unprepared.

Because they prepared the medical kits before each game and were "always on [their] feet," they were able to react in the most efficient manner, and with the greatest swiftness junior Joe Camp said. Junior Katie Nierman put it best when she said it takes "time, commitment, and a strong will in order to be a trainer or manager."

While spending their time benefiting the student body through programs, initiatives, advocacy, and events, Student Council still had fun. They helped share the students ideas, interests, and concerns with the teachers and principal, raised funds for schoolwide projects and assisted the community when they were in need. "My favorite activity was collecting cans of food for the needy," junior Cori Mellen said. "I felt much more involved." Other members joined not only to help the community and their peers, but to learn new skills and meet new people. "I learned to give back to the community and to be more responsible," senior Brad Mallers said, "I wanted to be a leader for the school and the students." Student Council also provided some fun activities for the student body to raise money. They provided Crush soda cans for students to send to their crushes during Valentine's Day. Also, students could fill out a compatibility quiz called Matchmaker and see the results of who was most compatible with them in the school. The members spent a lot of time together, and therefore, they became very close. Many hilarious moments arose. "Annual state conventions were always fun," senior Elvse Robbins said. "We would do millions of ice breakers with other students."

Crimson ribbons adorned the high school entrance, signaling the start of SADD's annual Red Ribbon Week, but something was different. Students weren't wearing the traditional red ribbons that became fraved and barely recognizable by the end of the week. Instead, bright red wristbands replaced them. "I thought it was a good idea to try something new." senior Amanda Cartwright said. "Kids were more likely to wear a wristband than a ribbon."

Clubs like SADD, Key Club, FCA, and Rotarians were popular extracurricular activities students were involved in. "I was chosen to join Rotarians, an organization that discusses the happenings in the community." senior Take Bapple said. "It was great because they fed us good food." Others chose to join Key Club, who threw a holiday party for area children. "Happy Halloween was a lot of fun because we got to dress up and throw a party for the elementary school kids," junior Amanda McCormick said.

Students who joined multiple clubs proved being involved wasn't easy. FCA and SADD met every Thursday morning during zero period, Key Club met every Wednesday morning, and Rotarians met once a month. "It was difficult to make all the meetings, but it was great to do good things for the community," junior Ashley Bernacchi said.

"I joined Key Club because they positive experience," Ashley said. Helping with Red Ribbon week, Kaitlyn Edwards (12) hands out Everyday, same routine. You walk into a classroom with the same people you saw yesterday. You sit down and wonder "what are we doing today?" But what if one class period of your day just wasn't the same? What if you walked into the classroom with the same people but those people were ones who looked up to you? Well, for a peer tutor they experienced that satisfaction everyday. "Everyday was a new experience and everyday we learned something new. Every student was different. All of these students were outstanding," Samantha Ryan said.

They walked into the same classroom every morning also. Only, first thing in the morning. Dedication and creativity were two things this club did not lack. Many may wonder just what Tech Club was and only a few may have known. "I programmed a wall-paper maker for students," Chris Ruderschmidt said.

Sure, Tech Club had creativity. But Art Club constantly made you apply it. Whether it be creating large ceramic bulldogs, bounding books with marbled paper, or making Christmas ornaments, creativity was never an absent factor for these students.

Whether, it was helping others, creating video games, or drawing each of these activities had one thing in common. They were inspired. Inspired by others. Inspired by computers. Inspired by an easel.

sull Luc With Iris was an original play that was about a girl, Iris, who's father suddenly went missing. I got the role of Gretta Good," senior Lauren Armstrong said. "It was my first play as well as my first major role." The story continued as Iris was taken away, and couldn't remember anything. The coats they wore served as their memory, but were taken away when Iris was kidnapped. "On opening night, I was really nervous." junior Kaitlyn Klein said. "We did skip a few lines though." Iris dealt with many adventures and met many different characters.

The play was a hit, but some things didn't work out like they were suppose to. "In one scene, I was supposed to have echoes of my voice after I talked," junior Natalie Polisson said. "But they didn't work, so I had to make something up on the spot." Even though little things went wrong, all the problems, wholeheartedness, and endless rehearsals brought them together. "One thing I loved about being in theater was that everyone was so supportive towards others," junior CJ Pawlikowski said. "We each inspired each other to be better actors and actresses everyday." The story ended with Iris finding her father. Even though she didn't remember that much, they ended up being a family once again.

It was anything but routine when it came to describing Royal Regiment. With everything from Mr. Brannock being late due to "crashing his Hummer in a ditch," junior Jackie McLaughlin said, to freshman Craig Doppler falling off a teammates back bending his trumpet, took place throughout the year. Not just the students contributed to the comedy. "The roadie painted a western mustache on Mr. Brannock's face on face paint night," junior Christopher May said. With the mass quantity of students who joined the Regiment. "participation" was a necessity to help build up enough adrenaline for any team who was currently competing. "We definitely helped out the teams," senior Kevin Kowert said. Sometimes, even senior David Esala took it a step further to pump up our teams. Occasionally dancing with the cheerleaders, David would give out that extra juice. "I'm sorry to all of the cheerleaders who we ticked off," David said. However, even with all of the fun and laughs everyone shared, perseverance was needed for their top performances. Senior captain Amelia Mota said "camp was needed to learn the routine for color guard. I also learned a lot of leadership skills while I was there too." Through living and learning, they were all able to unite and work together. while sharing a few good laughs.

Concentrating on the music, senior Brain Diederich plays the drums. "Playing the drums helped relieve stress. I played the trombone, but I wasn't capable of it." Brian said.

A wonderful, familiar feeling crept through the halls of the choir, orchestra, and band departments and lurked loudly, yet gracefully between the groups of students with their instruments: a love for music. Day after day, students would diligently practice playing their instruments in school and at home to not only better themselves, but the entire band. "We would all learn as a group, but at the same time challenge ourselves to do our best," junior Brittany Komasinski said.

To branch away from the classical style of music, some students were given the opportunity to play in the Jazz Band. "I liked Jazz Band better than Concert Band because we were able to improvise while we were playing," senior Cody Nelson said. Jazz Band also gave students the chance to learn, play, and listen to more types of music from different time periods including swing, big band, and the blues. "It was really awesome to see what music was like nearly 50 years ago," junior Jon Parry said.

Poised and ready, the orchestra glanced up to its conductor in anticipation. He threw his arms upwards and inhaled, signaling the first beat of the song. Afta listening for a while, it was easy to forget you weren't watching the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. The orchestra's professional look and sound was the result of weeks of hard work and dedication.

Being a member of Advanced, Intermediate, or Chamber Orchestra came with commitment. Chamber and Advanced practiced every Monday night for an hour and a half, which usually resulted in restlessness. "Sometimes Mr. Deal threw markers at people which was pretty funny," said sophomore Justin Leoni. In addition, Intermediate Orchestra worked hard daily to perfect their pieces.

Although many people thought of orchestra as boring, the students' animated personalities helped to liven up class. "We once convinced Shenzen to yell at Mr. Deal in Chinese," said junior Kaitlyn Edwards. "The look Mr. Deal gave him was priceless."

They rounded out the year with a spring break trip to New York City, where members of all orchestras' saw a Broadway show, practiced with the New York Phil Harmonic, and played for a children's hospital. "I was excited to get a picture of Mr. Deal doing the can-can in New York," said junior Jeff Kors.

Treble Clef. Bass. Alto. Soprano. For many, those words may seem unfamiliar but for choir students those words were just part of their day. Some had learned these differences through stages in their lives.

From concerts in the spring, winter, and fall, choir classes were constantly busy due to seasonal concerts. "My favorite part of the concerts was when we sang pop songs," sophomore Amy Reuze. "I could really get into them." Whether it was singing pop songs or melodies like "Beauty of the Earth," everyone enjoyed different things.

Preparing for concerts varied between each person.

"To get ready I would take a shower, do something nice with my hair, and practice a little in front of the mirror," freshman Becky Copeland said.

While the auditions were rigorous, many ended up making it to the top when trying out for Advanced Concert Choir. Try-outs included sight reading, memorizing a song, and performing individually in front of Mrs. Borodine. One thing that differed between freshmen classes and the advanced classes was the ISSMA competition which included performing in front of many criticizing judges.

With an unknown journey lying ahead freshmen eventually hoped to aspire to Advanced Choir.

With classes, songs, ensembles, notes, and solos, choir was not only fun and games. "We started off the class with warm ups, then sight read, and then we sung until the end of the hour," said senior Lacie Le May. Having at least four concerts a year, the choir classes had a lot of work to do. During the weeks of musical, the musical students and teacher were restless It was hard, but that didn't stop them from singing their hearts out. "I loved to be able to sing and learn about music," said junior Kristy Bielak, ISSMA was also a big part of the choir life. With having at least seven contests, three out of the nine gold winning piano solos qualified for state contest; nine out of the twenty-six vocal solos also had a chance to go to state. For Group 1 vocal ensembles, fifteen people received a gold. About fifty-two other ensemble members received a gold rating. "I had been in choir since 6th grade and thought it to be a good opportunity to broaden my voice vocally and I made new friends," said junior Heather Kala. Spring Sing, which was held in May, was a concert of fun where the kids wore colorful t-shirts and seniors got to show off their voices by doing senior solos. Even though the year was tough, choir members showed their dedication throughout the entire year.

What do you get when you combine toe-tapping songs, entertaining dances, hours of hardwork, and sparkly dresses* Led by their choreographer, senior Jenn Hagarbome, the Mixed and Girls' Show Choirs put in several hours each week. "It usually took me about two days to create a number," Jenn said. "Every once in a while I would get stuck, but I skipped over it and then it would come to me later." Whether it was after school on Wednesdays, or just during class each day, each group worked hard to perfect their numbers for the concerts. "I really enjoyed putting on a show and seeing the audience get into what we'd worked so hard on," said junior Kathryn Armenta.

At first glance QYP, or "Quit Your Pitchin," may have seemed like just a bunch of choir guys in swanky red suits. But truly, they were nine guys doing what they loved to do. "We were a group of guys that just loved to sing," said sophomore Kurt Wermers. And the boys weren't limited to the concerts in the auditorium. They went out into the community to perform at White Hawk Country Club and even Taft Middle School. "I liked the Taft concert best because we felt like celebrities," said senior Brad Mallers. Whether they were dancing, singing, or "movin to the groovin," the Show Choirs and QYP proved to be three of the main concert highlights.

Scrupulously striving for scholastic success, vast random knowledge, spelling and honors proved to excel in Spell Bowl, Ouiz Bowl, and Academic Super Bowl and National Honor Society. Spelling words like secularization, and consanguineous, the Spell Bowl team familiarized themselves with these words to prepare for the regional competition.

"We studied a cornucopia of words from the dictionary to prepare for meets," Kevin Jacobs said. Spell Bowl placed sixth overall in the regional competition; however, Quiz Bowl managed to make it to state. "I read random articles on Wikipedia," Peter Maginot said in response to practicing for meets. Containing information from the Progressives era, Academic Super Bowl answered a series of questions that pertained to Science, Math, Fine Arts, and English. With rigorous studying days before the competition, Super Bowl accomplished their aspirations and finished high in the region.

With a required ten hours of community service each semester, National Honor Society donated their services to those in need. I provided choir services to the community, involvement in soup kitchens, and offered music lessons to Taft students," Senior Amanda Feller said oming to school early, staying after school for practice and spending their well earned vacation time at school were just a few qualities of the Lettermen's and GVC member's. Many hours were put into being an athlete. manager, or a student trainer. Wearing that red and white jacket was definitely earned by each student. Not only were they required to play varsity time in their sport, they also were required to maintain a good GPA and to sell candy for the club. Being in a varsity sport allowed for more than just a coat for glory; it developed friendships and perseverance along with many other qualities. Learning to work under pressure was one of many characteristics achieved by many students. "I learned how to be graceful under pressure and deal with many situations," junior Martina Buchholz said. Sports helped to develop character as well as physical abilities. "I learned that if we developed a close relationship, we do better on the feild," junior Adam Kukulski said. Not only offering an environment all athletes could relate to. Lettermen's and GVC Club are an environment that all students should want to experience. "Playing a team sport taught me to work well with others and how to be a leader. I will also take away all the friendships that were created," said Julieta Garcia-Vicente. While filling freetime, sports also developed life-skills that will help in the future.

Pizza parties, Mardi Gras celebrations, long lasting friendships, and unforgettable memories. What more was needed in a club that has all these qualities? "The best memory I had was watching everyone play Twister at the Christmas party," freshmen Katerina Koutouvas said. "Everyone fell because they were going against Mrs. Atwood." As for sophomore Ashley Winters, one memory stood out among the rest. "The best memory of the club I have was the pizza party. We all had fun and we finally found out how crazy we all really were." Ashley said. Again, the club attended the annual foreign language field trip. While some out of the ordinary happenings occurred, most still had a good time. "The trip to Chicago was the best this year because we had the whole day to ourselves to shop and see Chicago," said Kristina Budgin. As for junior Sarah Luebcke the snow was the best part. "I will never forget when it snowed my sophomore year. It was so pretty," said Sarah.

French Club never lacked an activity that wasn't fun. From Twister to colorful beads, French Club always knew how to have a good time. No matter what the memory or the activity was, everyone pulled together and proved their dedication to themselves, their friends, and the club. "Students worked together decorating and preparing with great company." Linda Atwood said.

German Club continued its tradition of attending the Staatskongress field trip to Ball Sate in Muncie to participate in competitions and meet students from other German Clubs. However, instead of merely riding the bus, Mr. Rosenbaum drove the students to this event. Meetings consisted of German films or televison shows, games, discussions, and of course food. "The best part was listening to 'Ich Lebe' and watching Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire in German!" senior Mallory Rzonca said. Also, German exchange students arrived in October and stayed with host families. They participated in the homecoming parade, game, and attended the homecoming dance. "Having an exchange student was great! I got to know what their life was like and what they did for fun," junior Christina Rose said. "I made a friend for life." During winter time, along with caroling and baking, the AP German Class went to all the German classes and acted out the German holiday of St. Nikolas Tag. Senior Tommy Isailovich portrayed the lead role as the German equivalent to Santa Clause. "Choosing a career was difficult for most people; however, I found my niche as a St. Nikolaus impersonator," Tommy said. Whether you learned about the Japanese culture, or just had fun playing games, some Japanese Club meetings were just too funny to forget. "During one of the meetings, we were throwing a ball," sophomore Michelle Calhoun said. "We didn't want the ball to hit the ground, so my friend jumped five feet to catch it, she almost fell." While other times, it was our personal thoughts that made it unforgettable. "When we were doing the Homecoming float, I was sent to Dollar General for something," sophomore Amanda Hruska said. "Some and six other people piled into my car, and it was pretty funny because my car looked like a clown car."

Cooking and preparing food gave us a hint of what Japanese culture was about, but not the only way. "I was able to experience a little more of the Japanese culture in fun ways like cooking, games, and fieldtrips," senior Leah Burke said. "I loved learning all I could about the Japanese culture." They had Dance Pance Revolution competitions, Kendo sword fights, and even Karate instructors came in for demonstrations. "The best thing about Japanese Club was the Kendo matches with Shinai (bamboo) and bokudos (wooden) practice swords," sophomore Eleanor Blankenship said.

"I saw how spirited and active the club was and really wanted to be involved," junior Caitlin Johnston said. "Also, I wanted to attend state and national conventions and run for state and national offices." Caitlin's reasons were only a few of the benefits of joining. Others joined to meet new friends and expand their Latin knowledge.

Members enjoyed participating in Relay for Life, Adopt a Highway, and Certamen. First, Certamen, a Latin version of Jeopardyl, was made up of a panel of club members answering questions about mythology and Roman Literature. "Some of my favorite things were participating in Certamen, and Relay for Life," said sophomore Angela Langlie-Lesnik. The club was always busy.

Another favorite was going to the state convention. At the convention, clubs from all over the state were judged on different categories, such as their club spirit. Other awards are also given out, senior Phil Katz and freshman Wesley Wood brought back individual academic achievement awards. Along with the awards, members received state office positions. Junior James Freeman was elected to Parliament, sophomore Kathryn Kukla was elected historian, and junior Chris Miller became web master.

As the aroma of spices and salsa filled the air and swept through the school, everyone knew that Spanish Club was having a meeting. They assembled once a month and experienced entities of Spanish culture and practiced the Spanish language through social events and projects. Students enjoyed authentic homemade Spanish food made by fellow members or Ms. Shah, the sponsor. "The best part of Spanish Club was all the culture I learned about," junior Michelle Dragoin said. "I especially enjoyed all the delicious food that was served at meetings like tacos, chips, and salsa." Members also made small craft products like making tissue paper flowers and marcaes. They also made drawings.

Moreover, members also had fun at other places, such as their annual trip to Chicago in November and their trip to Six Flags in May. "We shopped at Watertower Place and down Michigan Avenue," junior Katie Keller said. "It was a blast." While gaining an appreciation and better understanding of the culture, members were able to spend time with their friends. "My favorite part of Spanish Club was just being able to hang out and have fun," junior Corey Hill said.

The club allowed students to experience culture outside of school. "I also liked how it expanded the Spanish traditions outside the classroom." Corey said.

panish Club - Year 4: Drew Cardinal

Why did you join

I love being part of a production that is directed by the best people. Also, I love singing, dancing, and acting.

Corey Hill (41)

I love singing and being on stage. After my first show, I was hooked! I am thankful for all the wonderful friends I made.

"Because all of my friends were and I had always wanted to be on stage instead of in the lighting."

Putting on her makeup, Jessica Teske(10) gets ready to go out on stage. "I made friendships that I know will stay with me for a long time! I was so sad when it ended but I'm excited for next year!" said Jessica. Photo by Larry Titak Playing around. Kara Ingelhart (10), Natalie Polisson (11), Lauren Armstrong (12), Kathryn Armenta (11), and Hannah Delaughter (9) act out the matchmaker scene. "I loved being a part of the musical and I'm really going to miss it next year," said Lauren.

This year's musical. Fiddler on the Roof, was different from previous shows because it revolved around the traditions, trials, and tribulations of a devout Jewish community. "A real Rabbi came in and spoke to the cast and opened the door to us on how lewish life would have been around the time of 'Fiddler,'" said junior Corey Hill who played the Rabbi. Also, the musical was much different than the play because actors and actresses had to learn choreography as well as just their lines. There were many complicated dance sequences, including a scene in which guys moved around with bottles wobbling on their heads as entertainment for a wedding. To prepare "I listened to the CD of the musical and watched the movie, but for 'Fiddler' I actually saw it on Broadway," said senior Elyse Robbins. "It was a lot of hard work, but in the end it all paid off," The cast had to rehearse incessantly, "every day except Sunday," said senior Brad Mallers, "and during hell week, we had to stay until almost 11 o'clock." The pit worked just as hard, staying until almost 10 o'clock practicing the music to accompany the cast. All in all, the production was amazing with wonderful acting, singing, lighting, and choreography.

During the dream sequence, Nick Papamihalakis (12) and Kaitlyn Klein(11) lie in bed discussing their eldest daughter and the warning Papa received. Photo by Larry Titak Playing the violin. Allison Ketcher (12) is the star, the Fiddler, whom weaves her way in and out throught the production.

With trembling hands and a dry mouth, students such as Kate Titus, prepared themselves for what lay ahead. The audience waited with baited breath as the event began to unfold.

As many prepared for the 'real world' outside of high school, some students were already receiving the skills needed to survive. Hero gave job skills, Speech gave communication skills, Thespians gave performance skills, and Boys' and Girls' State gave experience.

"I wanted to see what it would be like after we graduated," senior Ashlee Donelson said. "I liked the responsibilities of having a job," Hero provided students with an opportunity to experience the world outside of high school walls by going to school half day in order to pursue a career.

Some chose to join Speech to further their ability to speak to others. "I enjoyed speaking in front of people, and Speech gave me the opportunity to speak in competitions," junior Kate Titus said. Students were required to prepare and give a speech at every meet. While Speech members practiced speeches, thespians practiced play productions.

Other students prepared themselves by participating in Thespians which was made up of theater and play crews. Thespians worked long hours in order to insure a perfect performance.

I chose to take Mass Media and become a member of Shownime because I have always liked making movies."

Caleb Maurer (12)

The became a member of Inklings because I wanted to get some writing practice and learn how publication works."

I decided to become a member of Inklings because I enjoy writing. The staff helps to make it so much fun. "

Jotting down ideas, editor Natalie Grabowski (12) brainstorms for the next issure of inklings. "I loved working with my staff members and getting to know them. Inklings was my family and I couldn't see my life without it," Natalie said. Photo by Katie Wefler

Typing out her latest story, Katie Shaw (12) works diligently to meet her deadline. The most unusual thing I ever did to get a story was to venture into the back of the school's kitchen. I had to interview some of the lunch ladies for a story about buying lunches," Katie said. Photo by Emily Sheppand

Friday, The last day before too much deserved days of freedom. For most students, the last thing they wanted to do was get up for school, but there were a few perks to coming in. Friday meant that it was time for the newest edition of CPHS Showtime. "Showtime was great. It was entertaining and a nice break from the regular rigorous work week," senior David Esala said. Another perk was that once a month, Friday meant receiving the latest edition of Inklings.

CPHS Showtime and Inklings were things that students came to expect at the end of their week, but few knew the hard work that went into production. The diligence of the Inklings' staff resulted in receiving the prestigious Gallop Award. "The Gallop was an amazing honor which proved that Inklings really was one of the best high school papers in the nation," junior Caitlin Johnston said.

The members of Showtime put in an equal amount of effort to produce great shows. Segments ranged from what to do over the weekend to what was in style. "The segment where I asked people who they wanted to be their Valentine was my favorite," senior Amanda Allen said. "It was so cute and so much fun." The creative stories and segments of Inklings and Showtime were a great way to end the week.

Taping their latest show, Brian Delong (12) and John Chelebowski (12) introduce a segment. "The hardest part was watching myself on the show," Brian said. Photo by Emily Sheppard. Seventy five thousand six hundred minutes. How you measure a year? Yearbook could not be measured in quantity this year, but rather the quality of staff. Not only did everyone work very hard to make the yearbook what it was but they also stuck together when work was hard. "Production nights were an opportunity to finish pages before we sent them to the plant. When I finished working on the pages, it was a relief because the pages were done and we could work on the rest of the book." Emily Sheppard said. It was the feeling of satisfaction that came after production night that kept everyone going. "Joining yearbook was the best decision I ever made." Marissa DiGiacomo said. The Excalibur 2005 was named a Hoosier Star for excellence in yearbooks, and the book also took honors in cover. theme development, and section designs at the annual Ball State Journalism Day.

Quill and Scroll members were comprised of both newspaper and yearbook students who were at the top one-third of their class. "I felt very honored to be a student who excelled in the journalism aspect and was honored for it," Natalie Grabowski said. Members were chosen not just by their grades but also their show of leadership qualities.

YOUR CHOICE YOUR BOOK.

Excaliber Valence 90

Excalibur, Volume 90, was produced by the yearbook staff at Crown Point High School in Crown Point, Indiana and printed at Herff Jones Yearbook in Shawnee Mission, Kansas. The account was serviced by Lisa Keene and Lisa Merino. The theme "Your Choice. Your Year," was developed by the Excalibur Editorial staff. The cover and endsheet designs were developed and produced in Adobe Photoshop 7.0.1 and Adobe InDesign CS2 by senior Jessica Vercellino and junior Nicole Akey. The Silktouch Bright Red cover featured varnish.

The book's 272 pages were printed on 100 point Bordeaux. The body copy was 12 pt AHJ Schnittger, Myriad Web, or AHJ Cassidy; captions were 10 pt Myriad Pro. Headlines ranged 55 to 72 pt in Myriad Pro, Myriad Web and AHJ Schnittger. The staff created the pages on Adobe InDesign CS2 and the book was produced on 22 Dell Pentium 4 Processors, Pictorial coverage was provided by staff photographers. Titak Photography, and Visual Sports Network, Titak Photography also presented the senior pictures while the underclassmen were presented by HR Imaging. A total of 1,400 copies were sold ranging from 45-55 dollars. The Excalibur was a member of the Indiana High School Press Association, the National Scholastic Press Association, the Columbia Scholastic Press Association, and Ouill and Scroll

A special thanks goes out to Mrs. Lisa Keene, Mrs. Lisa Merino, Mr. Larry Titak, Mr. Ryan Pitcock, Mrs. Sue Kiefer, Mrs. Mary Roth, Mrs. Kim Templin, Mrs. Melissa Wermers, Mr. Jerry Caravana, Mr. Bill Dorulla, Mrs. Anna Lee Weilbaker, as well as the English teachers, coaches, the faculty and staff, the guidance department and the administration.

letter from the editors

We have to admit something By the time the end of the year rolled around, we were really sick of choices. From choosing what not to put on the endsheets to choosing the right shade of red. the year was consumed by the endless choices concerning our book and our staff. We realized though that choices are a part of life and tried to make the right ones, but that didn't mean we always succeeded. Actually, we chose the wrong choice a lot of the time. But the end result, this book, was most definitely a success. Through this book, we attempted to record the choices and memories you made. Despite the overwhelming responsibilities involved, we won't lie. It wasn't all work. While preserving this year's memories, we created our own. Yeah, it took a lot of hours, writing, and Photoshopping, but it also took a lot of trips to Uncle Chen's and Main St. Cafe, dressing up, production night parties, and dancing. These are the things we'll never forget. We always said this book was our baby, but it wouldn't have even been possible without this year's staff, probably the best one yet. It incorporates a little bit of every personality on staff, including the eccentric, the sassy, the funny, the random, and the sophisticated. At the same time, it contains a piece of all of you as well, because we could never have made this book what it is without every student who chose to excel in a sport, to volunteer time to a club, or to stand out individually. All of your choices and qualities mixed together to form the incomparable, individualistic personality of Crown Point High School. So, thank you for a wonderful year of experiences and choices which we will never forget. We hope that you cherished it and had as much fun as we did. Muchos love!

"I wanted to make it a good memory..." Marybeth Childress (12) said.

As the tanning beds, nails salons, and hair alons filled up and dresses disappeared off the racks, it was easy to see the mob of prom girls just around the corner. Although the choices and duties could be overwhelming, science teacher and prom organizer. Elizabeth Kineer, put forth innumerable hours to perfect the prom. Choices had to be made such as what the theme should be, "where to go afterwards, how to do [their] hair," or how to "get flowers, dresses bought, nails done, and tickets," seniors Valerie Fischer and Randi Jobbe related. Unlike women, however, men had quite a different preparation process; dresses and tuxes instead of jewelry and ties. Men like senior

Adam Kennedy prepared by "playing video games" and saving up to pay for he tickets. Thicago, and lunch. Considering it was the coron year for the class of 2006 and "the last big fling before graduation," Valerie found going to prom freebachle. However, as the boys asked and the girls were getting asked, a sad realization came over the class of 2006; their high school careers were coming to a close. The prom memories wouldn't be forgotten but the moments would be left in a cloud of music, fog, and glow sticks. Senior John Nelson put the proposition of the pro

Planning, preparing, and stress. One may ar gue that up until the big night that, the only thing that comes out of preparations. Money was one major concern but for Meli sa Mierzwa she was concerned with something a little different. "My biggest concern was making sure I didn't fall on my face because of my shoes," Melissa said. From concerns to preparations many people had different ways of getting ready for the big night. For Alex Lumakovska it took four hours to get ready, unlike Tim Maxwell who said it unly took him a couple minutes. In the end through, none of it mattered Everyone just warned to have Jun dancing and hanging with Iricada. The thing I was looking forward to about the whole entire profil experience was just having a good time with my boytmend and friends," senior Lauren O'Connor said. After the dance, the traditional after prom activities tooly place like going to Chicago and eating at the Cheesecale-Factory but junior Nick Zolfo had something different in mind. My group went and played laser tag and had endless amounts of fun. Nick said, All in all, Prom was unforgettable for uniterclassmen and underclassmen alike.

The left is not left a lasting impression. The Bulldog spirit was loyally upheld until the very end as some students continued the tailgaiting tradition in the Star Plaza parking lot prior to the ceremony. "We tailgated throughout the year before football games and other sporting games and it was fitting to tailgate before graduation," Janet Krefer said. Even during the ceremony, the seniors '06' spirit persisted as valedictorians.

wowed graduates, family, friends, teachers, and administrators with their speeches. Nathaniel Fruids satirically talked about feelings and emotions. "Sure, the school wasn't constructed of mirrors, but we really did feel lost in the first few weeks in the new building," Nathaniel said. Thomas Isailovich reculs lected high school memories such as when the whole school did the ways outside during the bomb threat. Afterwards, the graduates gathered together for the last time as they commemorated their accomplishments and memories, hugging and ressing for pictures.

The line outside of the bookstore reached enormous lengths during the lunch hours in the middle of May, an unusual event at any time of the year. Seniors filed out of the other end graduation caps and gowns in tow. The inevitable end loomed even closer now as the weather warmed and restlessness built. "I wanted to come back for the graduation ceremony even though I graduated after the first semester. I wanted to see everyone one last time and knew I would always remember walking across that stage," senior Kristin Black said. While seniors were choosing open house menus, senior brunch outfits, dorm necessities, and summer trips to make the most of their last summer together, underclassmen prepared for the upcoming year as well as for the usual summer beach trips and activities. New classes, including AP European History and AP Government, were added to the curriculum for next year. "I was deciding whether to take AP Environmental Science or AP European History. I picked history because it was only offered to sophomores, so it was my only chance to take the class," freshman Kelsey Drasga said.

Yet, academics weren't the only things consuming our minds. A "Dog Crew" was formed for the following year to rally school spirit, choir seniors had the daunting task of picking their senior solos for the annual Spring Sing, and the spring sports season was still going strong. "I sang 'What A Wonderful World', because it's my mom's favorite song, and the words have meaning behind them," senior Katie Keilman said. So what made this year different or more special than past years? Our choices. "I don't regret any of the choices I made throughout the year, and I just hope the summer will stay that way," sophomore Brooke Bonich said. So, as the last day of steakettes and curly fries, locker bay chats, and finals came to an end, we walked out of the building knowing that we really did make it OUR CHOICE. OUR YEAR.
